ABOUT THE INSTRUCTOR

Prior to becoming a firearms instructor George Hill served honorably in the U.S. Army Infantry as well as in both Virginia and Utah National Guard units. During his service he worked with wide array of groups including the British Royal Marines, Canadian Land Force Command, and the South African National Defense Force. His post-military career has included service in law enforcement, work in fugitive recovery and drug interdiction, private security contracting, and VIP protection. He has attended many of the nation's leading firearms schools and training programs both during and after his military career to attain knowledge and experience in broad range of areas, including tactical operations, self-defense, and marksmanship. He is a published author of several firearm and self-defense articles and is a regular guest of the nationally syndicated radio show Armed American Radio. George is also known by the moniker "The Mad Ogre" from his blog MadOgre.com.
